

The Americanism
of Socialism

By Eric Hass

Published Online by Socialist Labor Party of America
www.slp.org

June 2006

PUBLISHING HISTORY

FIRST PRINTING	November 1941
SECOND PRINTING	March 1942
THIRD PRINTING	November 1944
FOURTH PRINTING	December 1946
FIFTH PRINTING	November 1950
SIXTH PRINTING	December 1954
SEVENTH PRINTING	October 1955
EIGHTH PRINTING	November 1958
NINTH PRINTING	January 1961
TENTH PRINTING	December 1962
ELEVENTH PRINTING	March 1967
ONLINE EDITION	June 2006

NEW YORK LABOR NEWS
P.O. BOX 218
MOUNTAIN VIEW, CA 94042-0218
<http://www.slp.org/nyln.htm>

Introduction

Nearly a decade has passed since the articles in this pamphlet were written. To say that it has been a decade of profound and portentous changes would be to state an obvious truth. It has witnessed a concentration of economic power greater than in any other period in the nation's history. In 1940 there were thirty corporations with assets of a billion dollars or more; by 1950 there were fifty-six. These gigantic concerns, veritable economic empires, have swallowed up thousands of smaller companies, thereby acquiring for themselves an ever larger proportionate control of the economy. In 1948, the Federal Trade Commission said in a report on "The Merger Movement" that "if nothing is done to check the growth in concentration, either the giant corporations will ultimately take over the country, or the government will be impelled to step in and impose some form of direct regulation in the public interest."

Suffice it to say that nothing has been done to check the growth of concentration. Nor has government "regulation" altered the trend, inherent in the capitalist system, that has given a handful of billion-dollar corporations virtual control of the economy.

Meanwhile the concentration of economic power has been paralleled by the growth in the political power and influence of the plutocratic or top-capitalist class. This ominous development is reflected in the prodigious rise of militarism, on the one hand, and in the legislation of the postwar period, on the other — especially in the Taft-Hartley Act and the Internal Security Act of 1950, known popularly as the McCarran Act.

Militarism always allies itself with property and those who own property, and American militarism is no exception. The plutocracy supports the militarists in their attempts to Prussianize the nation, enact a system of peacetime conscription and, by means of huge subsidies, to dominate science and education. And the militarists reciprocate by exalting "bigness" and "efficiency," and by placing stupendous orders for weapons and supplies with the giant corporations. This unwholesome alliance has given a tremendous impetus to the military spirit in America and is gradually transforming a nation that is traditionally anti-militarist into one of the world's most militaristic powers.

The Americanism of Socialism

As for the class-dictated legislation of the postwar period, the Taft-Hartley Act, with its strikebreaking injunction club and its harsh restrictive clauses, stands out as one of the most vicious. The potentialities of this law as an instrument to straitjacket the workers are virtually limitless. Business Week, December 18, 1946, said in an editorial that the Taft-Hartley Act “crossed the narrow line separating a law which aims only to regulate from one which could destroy. Given a few million unemployed in America, given an administration in Washington which was not pro-union — and the Taft-Hartley Act conceivably could wreck the labor movement.”

It is an open secret that the Taft-Hartley Act was drafted with the aid of lawyers in the pay of the National Association of Manufacturers. Its purpose is to weaken and ultimately to break the backbone of the workers' resistance to intensified exploitation.

The McCarran Act is another consequence of the growth of plutocratic power in America. Ostensibly aimed at the Communists, its real object is to establish a reign of fear under which the spirit of dissent will die and unresisting orthodoxy will be enthroned. “What is disturbing and, in the literal meaning of the word, un-American,” said the New York Times, September 9, 1950, in an editorial comment on the McCarran legislation, “is a cringing anxiety to avoid controversy, even though matters of principle as well as fact are involved.”

The McCarran Act, with its threats of concentration camps and its provision empowering a “Subversive Activities Control Board” to brand virtually any dissenting group as “Communist,” is intended to inculcate this cringing un-American attitude.

The passage of this subversive and Nazi-like legislation by an overwhelming majority of both houses was dramatic evidence of the fragility of American constitutional freedom in the period of capitalist decadence. With two or three honorable exceptions, the so-called liberals in Congress either supported the measure or opposed it on the ground that it wasn't tough enough!

The Americanism of Socialism

Many of the legislators who participated in this shameful rape of the Constitution were undoubtedly swayed by the hysteria that swept the country and reached a peak during the first weeks of the Korean war. Others were thinking with cold and cynical deliberation of the elections the following November. Still others — men like Senators Mundt, Ferguson and McCarran — were just as coldly intent upon accomplishing the subversion of American constitutional freedom, especially of the right of the American people to abolish or alter present property relationships.

In this connection it is noteworthy that Senator Karl E. Mundt, who was the author of some of the most fascistic passages of the law, once requested Mr. John W. Davis, chief counsel of the House of Morgan, to define “un-Americanism” for the guidance of the House Committee on Un-American Activities. “If any one man in America has set the standards for this committee,” Mundt said in a speech in the House, May 17, 1946, “it is Mr. John W. Davis of New York.”

Mr. Davis’s reply to Mundt’s request was printed in the Congressional Record, May 17, 1946, and in Liberty magazine, September 22, 1945. In part, it said: “. . . to advocate . . . the abolition of the right of private property . . . would be deeply un-American.”

This is the definition of plutocracy; it is not the definition of history. Indeed, twice the American people have overthrown species of property. The first time was when they took the thirteen colonies from King George III. The second time was when they abolished chattel slavery in the South, thereby, in effect, destroying about two billion dollars worth of slave property. These are precedents for the Socialist demand that private ownership of the socially operated means of production be abolished. They are proof that American tradition rejects the plutocratic theory that property, especially plutocratic property, is sacred.

In this period of rampant reaction, the Socialist Labor Party is setting an example in firmness and fortitude for the American working class. Unfazed by the hysteria, its resolution hardened by the initial successes of the reaction, the Party carries on its supremely important work of education, patiently explaining to the workers the historical and economic forces that are taking the country down the road to war and plutocratic feudalism, showing them the program whereby they themselves can end this capitalist nightmare and bring to birth a society of peace and freedom.

The Americanism of Socialism

Speed the day!

Eric Hass

October, 1950

“You see, my kind of loyalty was loyalty to one’s country, not to its institutions or its office-holders. The country is the real thing, the substantial thing, the eternal thing; it is the thing to watch over, and care for, and be loyal to; institutions are extraneous, they are its mere clothing, and clothing can wear out, become ragged, cease to be comfortable, cease to protect the body from winter, disease, and death. To be loyal to rags, to shout for rags, to worship rags, to die for rags — that is a loyalty of unreason, it is pure animal; it belongs to monarchy, was invented by monarchy, let monarchy keep it. I was from Connecticut, whose constitution declares “that all political power is inherent in the people, and all free governments are founded on their authority and instituted for their benefit; and that they have AT ALL TIMES an undeniable and indefeasible right ALTER THEIR FORM OF GOVERNMENT in such a manner as they may think expedient.” Under that gospel, the citizen who thinks he see that the commonwealth’s political clothes are worn out, and yet holds his peace and does not agitate for a new suit, is disloyal; he is a traitor. That he may be the only one who thinks he sees this decay, does not excuse him; it is his duty to agitate anyway, and it is the duty of the others to vote him down if they do not see the matter as he does.”

MARK TWAIN.

(“A Connecticut Yankee In King Arthur’s Court.”)

I. Spurious vs. Genuine Americanism

You've been told that Socialism is un-American. The politicians say so. Your employer is emphatic on the point. The labor fakers rarely miss an opportunity to brand Socialism "un-American." If you are like most workers, you're skeptical. First of all, you can't quite swallow the "Americanism" of the super-patriots who peddle this yarn — super-patriots like the American Legion Commander-in-Chief¹ who said several years ago that his organization would be used to smash Socialism.

"Do not forget," he said, "that the Fascisti are to Italy what the American Legion is to the United States."

Because such people are the loudest in traducing Socialism, you smell something fishy in their attacks. Moreover, your native sense of fair play prompts you to give the Socialists a hearing. It is up to them to prove their case.

That's precisely what we aim to do. We aim to prove that there are two kinds of "Americanism"; that one is spurious and is a reflection of property interests; that the other has its roots deeply embedded in American tradition and is in harmony with the loftiest aspirations of the Founding Fathers.

It is an ancient device of despotism to cloak itself in virtue. When it is attacked, it cries to high heaven that virtue is outraged. In this manner it sows doubt among the enemies of despotism and divides them against themselves. Justice Brandeis made the point neatly when he said:

"Despotism, be it financial or political, is vulnerable unless it is believed to rest upon moral sanction. The longing for freedom is ineradicable. It will express itself in protest against servitude and inaction unless the striving for freedom be made to seem immoral. Long ago monarchs invented, as a preservative for absolutism, the

¹ Alvin Owsley, former Commander-in-Chief of the American Legion, in an interview copyrighted by the N.E.A., January, 1923.

The Americanism of Socialism

fiction of “The divine right of Kings.”²

Here is a modern example of the employment of this device: When capitalist apologists speak of capitalism they do not say “capitalism,” they say “democracy” or “Americanism.” They use “democracy” and “Americanism” as synonyms for “capitalism.” They know the workers cherish American traditions and treasure the Bill of Rights. If the workers can be made to believe that capitalism and democracy, or capitalism and Americanism, are one and the same, capitalist tyranny is saved. Just as the rogues of the Middle Ages sought sanctuary in a church, the exploiters of modern times seek safety in the folds of the American flag.

The capitalist class and its sycophants and servitors may pay lip-service to democracy but, whenever democracy and their material interests clash, they are ever ready to strangle the former to preserve the latter. It was the big industrialists and financiers who financed the rise of Nazism in Germany and Fascism in Italy, and who applauded the strangulation of free speech, free press and popular elections in those unhappy [capitalist] countries. And it is the capitalist class in America which applauds every liberty-throttling measure that is proposed, which clamors for anti-strike laws and other curbs on human freedom. Like the slave-owning class of the old South, they are blinded by their property interests. This proper-blindness, characteristic of all propertied classes, caused the truly great American, Abraham Lincoln, to remark:

“The love of property and consciousness of right or wrong have conflicting places in organization, which often make a man’s course seem crooked, his conduct a riddle.” (Hartford, Conn., March 5, 1860.)

In contrast to the spurious, spread-eagle variety of Americanism is the Americanism embodied in the Declaration of Independence. That immortal document declares that whenever any form of government becomes destructive to the ends of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, it is the right of the people to abolish it — nay, “it is their duty to throw off such government, and to provide new guards for their future security.” It utters an admonition against complacently suffering evil conditions because of a mistaken reverence for ancient forms. “. . . all experience hath shewn,” it says, “that mankind are more disposed to suffer when evils are sufferable, than to right themselves by abolishing the forms to which they are accustomed.”

² Louis D. Brandeis, Other People’s Money and How the Bankers Use It. New York: Frederick A. Stokes Co., 1914.

The Americanism of Socialism

When a certain judge was called upon to read the Declaration of Independence at a Fourth of July celebration in New Jersey a few years ago, he mopped his forehead when he had finished and remarked: “Phew! I didn’t realize that that was such an incendiary document!”

It is not incendiary but it is revolutionary. Its authors believed that liberty should be a living thing, not a dead abstraction with which to cloak slavery. But what is liberty? Is it liberty to be able to quit one master only to be compelled to seek another? Is it liberty for one class to be in economic bondage to another? The Declaration of Independence does not define liberty. Abraham Lincoln, the son of toil and champion of the oppressed, did, He said:

“With some the word liberty may mean for each man to do as he pleases with himself, and the product of his labor; while with others the same word may mean for some men to do as they please with other men and with other men’s labor. Here are two not only different, but incompatible things, called by the same name, liberty. And it follows that each of the things is, by the respective parties, called by two different and incompatible names — liberty and tyranny.”³

So it is with the Socialists and capitalists. The capitalists regard as tyranny the proposal that the workers should appropriate and dispose of the product of their labor; the Socialists conceive as the essence of liberty a social system under which the useful producers receive the full social product of their toil. This is the nub of the social question of our age. Around it such questions as war, unemployment, civil liberty, dictatorship, and many others, revolve.

³ Address delivered at Baltimore, April 18, 1864.

II. Hamiltonism vs. Jeffersonism

Spurious Americanism, the Americanism which reflects property interests, is distrustful of the workers. Its definition of democracy is:

“Democracy — a government of the masses. . . . Result is mobocracy. Attitude toward property is communistic — negating property rights.”

This was the definition given in Army Training Manual No. 2000-2025, adopted in 1929 by the War Department but withdrawn in 1932 after protests were made against it. It bespeaks the fears and apprehensions of the property-owning class. Such an attitude was in evidence among a few aristocrats when our nation was born. They believed, and argued, that the government should be free of all pressure from the people and it should have “unlimited power” over them. Alexander Hamilton was the most distinguished exponent of the idea that the “elite” should rule. For the judgment of the people he had supreme contempt.

“The voice of the people,” Hamilton told the Constitutional Assembly, “has been said to be the voice of God; and, however generally this maxim has been quoted and believed, it is not true in fact. The people are turbulent and changing; they seldom judge or determine right.”

He feared that a “democratic assembly” would be dangerous to the interest of the wealthier citizens and he argued for giving the “first class” (aristocracy) disproportionate power and for the election of its representatives for life. “Nothing but a permanent body,” he contended, “can check the imprudence of democracy.”⁴

Among those who vigorously opposed rule by the “elite” was Thomas Jefferson. Jefferson had boundless faith in the people’s sagacity and judgment. “I am not one of those who fear the people,” he wrote. “They, and not the rich, are our dependence for continued freedom.”

⁴ From the notes on the secret proceedings of the Constitutional Convention by Robert Yates, Esq., United States; Formation of the Union, Library of Congress, p. 781.

The Americanism of Socialism

He did not believe the people were wither stupid or turbulent as did Hamilton, and he considered it to be a primary duty of government to educate and inform them and withhold no secrets from them. “Educate and inform the whole mass of people,” he wrote in a letter to James Madison. “Enable them to see that it is their interest to preserve peace and order and they will preserve them. They are the only sure reliance for the preservation of our liberty.”

Hamiltonism, the theory that the elite should rule, did not die with Hamilton. It is in evidence today even among those who feign to embrace Jeffersonian principle. Hamiltonism is especially virulent as the conflict of class interests sharpens, and never more so than when the interest of the capitalist class demand war and the overwhelming mass of workers demand peace. It is then that the most celebrated “democrats” advance the specious argument that the people are incapable of making the right decisions and should defer to those who are allegedly, “better informed.”

Among those who have advanced this argument is the ardent Roosevelt supporter, the Most Rev. Joseph P. Hurley, Roman Catholic Bishop of St. Augustine, Florida. In a nation-wide radio address⁵ urging that America emulate the Nazis and allow the President to plunge the nation into an undeclared war because “the constitutional prerogative of the Congress [to declare war] is no longer the style,” Bishop Hurley posed the question of who should decide on war or peace:

“Since . . . we are confronted with a conflict between aid to the Allies and avoidance of war, who shall decide? Certainly not the people, for they have neither the experience, nor access to the facts, nor in many cases the understanding which are required.”!

“The people . . . seldom judge or determine right,” said Alexander Hamilton.

Bishop Hurley, the “democrat,” is in perfect accord with Alexander Hamilton, the advocate of undisguised oligarchy. They differ only in this: Hamilton was without the base alloy of hypocrisy. The politician-priest who in one breath contemptuously derides the judgment of the people, in another piously exclaims: “I have an abiding faith in government by the people” And he proceeds to confirm his “abiding faith” with the impudent and baseless implication that “the people” were responsible for the chaotic pre-war state of affairs with the words:

⁵ Address delivered over the Columbia Broadcasting System network, July 6, 1941.

The Americanism of Socialism

“Nor is the record of democratic peoples in the pre-war period such as would inspire much confidence.”

This cunning and contemptible aspersion on the victims of capitalist dissolution and mismanagement is not unlike the more direct assaults on the principles of popular rule which are daily being made in “authoritarian” France. For in France, under the rule of the Ultramontane absolutist, Marshal Petain, the lips of the “sovereign people” are sealed, the “elite” rule, and all the evils which have befallen the nation as a result of capitalist chaos and decay are openly blamed on the people who, in the words of the Chief of State, exercised their rights “in total irresponsibility.”⁶

Bishop Hurley’s speech, abounding in sophistries and slurs upon the anti-war majority of American workers, was promptly endorsed by nearly every war-mongering capitalist newspaper in America. Cabinet members and Administration whips in Congress commented on it enthusiastically. The President remained eloquently silent.

Attempts have been made to justify Mr. Roosevelt’s usurpation of the power to make war by citing the actions taken by Abraham Lincoln against the Confederacy in the first days of his Administration. But, apart from the fact that Lincoln initiated no hostile action, he was dealing with a rebellion, while the action that was urged upon President Roosevelt was aimed at a foreign Power. In edging the nation into an undeclared war against the opposition of the overwhelming majority of its citizens, the President responded to the interests of the owning class whose foreign markets were imperiled by Nazi capitalist rivals.

When it is understood that the issues of the Second World War are not ideological, but economic, it becomes perfectly clear why the ruling class cannot “educate and inform the whole mass of people,” as Thomas Jefferson urged. The “mass of people,” i.e., the working class, would not fight a war for venal ends. Hence they are treated to spread-eagle oratory and exhorted to defer to the decisions of the President and the “elite” who surround him.

⁶ [New York Herald Tribune, July 9, 1941.]

The Americanism of Socialism

Spurious Americanism distrusts the workers and believes “they seldom judge or determine right, i.e., “right” for the interests of the exploiting few.

Genuine Americanism, of which Socialism is the highest expression, has unswerving faith in the working class, and in its ability, once it is informed and educated concerning its class interest, to regenerate society, preserve the liberties wrested from tyranny in the past and augment them with the freedom of freedoms — freedom from exploitation and wage slavery. To those workers who, bewildered by the contradictions of decadent capitalism, are inclined to invest the “elite” with autocratic powers, we recall the signal warning of Abraham Lincoln:

“Let them [the workingmen] beware of surrendering a political power which they already possess, and which, if surrendered, will surely be used to close the door of advancement against such as they, and to fix new disabilities and burdens upon till all of liberty shall be lost.” (First annual message, Dec. 3, 1861.)

III. Free Speech — Weapon of Truth

“Come say and publish all one knows
And go on gladly thus —
BUT — let nobody blow his nose
Unless he thinks like us!

— Goethe

No one sings louder praises for freedom of speech, freedom of press and the right of peaceful assembly — in the abstract — than the self-styled “100 per cent American.” In times when the class struggle simmers, comparatively few attempts are made by the ruling class and their sycophants to infringe on the liberties nominally guaranteed by the Bill of Rights. Perhaps we should add that this holds for the greater part of the nation. There are communities such as the states of the deep South and certain industrial feudal communities in the North too, where Goethe’s clever satirical verse expresses the rule.

It is the common experience of workers in steel towns, or coal mining communities, for example, to be stripped of all their nominal liberties the moment the class struggle begins to boil. Especially when martial law is invoked to break strikes are the workers confronted with a series of “verbotens” forbidding them free speech and even the right to assemble in groups. Many a toiler will take with him to the grave scars he received from plug-uglies and minions of the law for insisting on the exercise of his constitutional rights.

As capitalism feels the cold hand of death upon it, ever bolder assaults are made upon those liberties which afford Socialism the opportunity of freely presenting to the workers a program for their emancipation. As Karl Marx pointed out long ago:

“The bourgeoisie [that is, the employing class] perceives correctly that all the weapons, which it forged against feudalism [free speech, free press, etc.], turn their edges against itself; that all the means of education, which it brought forth, rebel against its own civilization; that all the gods, which it made, have fallen away from it. It understands that all its so-called citizens’ rights and progressive organs assail and menace its class rule, both in its social foundation and its political superstructure —

The Americanism of Socialism

consequently, have become ‘socialistic.’” (Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte, 1852)

One has only too look back into American history to the era preceding the Civil War, to the mob spirit invoked against the Abolitionists, to the tar-and-feather “parties,” to the shameful murder of Lovejoy and the persecution of the brave William Lloyd Garrison. The Abolitionists were attacking a form of property, the institution of chattel slavery. The owners of that property and their supporters in the North, though they mouthed praises to the Bill of Rights, argued that there was a “limit” on free speech, free press, and other liberties through the exercise of which their “peculiar” institution was attacked. The Bourbon slave-holders “loved democracy” — in the abstract, or until it was used against their system. They answered sharply by the devastating logic of the brilliant Abolitionist leader, Wendell Phillips:

“He does not really believe his opinions, who dares not give free scope to his opponent.” (Phi Beta Kappa Centennial Address, Harvard University, June 30, 1881.)

So we say to the latter-day Bourbons,⁷ who speciously argue today that free speech is a “privilege” and should not be extended to those who oppose the present social order and the institution of private property. This is a far cry from the Americanism of the Founding Fathers. To them the Bill of Rights was no set of glittering generalities to be dragged out as tinsel for Fourth of July orations and honored in

⁷ The list of those who demand limitations on the right of free speech is much longer today than when this was written none years ago. Then only the most blatant reactionaries such as Westbrook Pegler and George U. (Rubber-Hose) Harvey, showed their contempt for the Constitution openly. Today they are joined by scores of representatives of the more “respectable” element of the ruling class. The latter see in the Communist hysteria an opportunity to silence all criticism of their system and to suppress all demands for social changes.

Among contemporary capitalist spokesmen who have urged that dissenter be gagged is New York’s Lieutenant Governor Joe E. Hanley. Mr. Hanley was quoted by the New York Times, July 12, 1949, as saying that “when you get to the point of using free speech to destroy this nation you should be treated like any traitor and shut up.”

But it is not the destruction of the nation that Mr. Hanley fears; it is the destruction of the property rights and class privileges of the capitalist class. And it is utterances calling for the abolition of private property that he would silence. In this connection, Mr. Hanley’s reference to traitors and treason recalls the following memorable statement made by Thomas Jefferson on this point:

“Most codes extend their definition of treason to acts not really against one’s country. They do not distinguish between acts against the government, and acts against oppressions of the government. The latter are virtues, yet have furnished more victims to the executioner than the former. Real treasons are rare; oppressions frequent. The unsuccessful strugglers against tyranny have been the chief martyrs of treason laws in all countries.” (E.H., September 13, 1950.)

The Americanism of Socialism

the breach. They believed implicitly that “the best test of truth is the power of the thought to get itself accepted in the competition of the market.” [Supreme Court Justice Holmes in a dissenting opinion the case of Abrams et al v. U.S.] This was the theory of the Constitution. Its authors knew that many fighting faiths were proved by time and experience to be obsolete, and that if new faiths were not permitted to arise and flourish society would surely retrogress. Perhaps none among the Revolutionary Fathers reflected more profoundly upon this subject than Thomas Jefferson, whose words of wisdom come echoing down the aisles of American history as a warning to our own generation. Said Jefferson:

“Truth is great and will prevail if left to herself. She is the proper and sufficient antagonist of error and has nothing to fear from the conflict, unless by human interposition, disarmed of her natural weapons — free argument and debate; error ceasing to be dangerous when it is permitted freely to contradict them.”

The numerous infringements of Constitutional liberties reported in the capitalist press, the new ordinances intimidating aliens and workers, fingerprinting, the invocation of discredited anti-sedition and anti-syndicalist laws, all bear witness that the modern capitalist class is shaking in its stolen boots and that, unlike the founders of the republic, it fears the natural weapons of truth — “free argument and debate.”

IV. Throttle Minorities at Your Peril!

Civil liberties are always safe as long as their exercise doesn't bother anyone — New York Times editorial, January 3, 1941

“Freedom of speech,” said Mr. Roosevelt in a speech on the eve of the 1940 elections, “is of no use if a man has nothing to say.” To this we might add: Freedom of speech is of little use if a political party cannot also submit for the decision of the majority its proposals. Mr. Roosevelt has eloquently saluted “free elections,” but there is a conspicuous contrast between his words and the actual conditions which prevail. The Socialist Labor Party can speak with authority on this question, for, only a few weeks before Mr. Roosevelt said that “Americans are determined to retain for themselves the right of free speech, free religion, free assembly and the right which lies at the basis of all of — the right to choose the officers of their own government in free elections” — only a few weeks before the President thus declaimed on free elections, the Socialist Labor Party had been prevented by illegal and violent means from placing its ticket on the ballot in some of the important industrial states.⁸

The experience of the Socialist Labor Party in Illinois alone reveals the hollow mockery of such declamations as those of the President. There members of the Party were systematically harassed and assaulted, and one was kidnapped, to prevent them from circulating nominating petitions and otherwise to deprive them of opportunities to reach the electorate with the Socialist message. Illegal interference with a federal election was clearly a federal offense and called for an investigation by the Department of Justice and the apprehension and arraignment of the guilty parties. Instead, the Department of Justice hemmed and hawed and finally dropped the matter — without even a serious pretense at investigating.

Illinois is by no means the only state where hoodlum tactics are employed against the Socialist Labor Party, by the self-styled “super-patriotic” organizations. But crude and violent though, these flagrant assaults on “free elections” are, they are less damaging to the principles Mr. Roosevelt declaimed for than the obstacles raised in the path of minority parties by state legislatures in the form of prohibitive election laws. In some states election barriers have been raised so high that minority parties are ruled out and new parties haven't a "Chinaman's chance" of challenging the monopoly of the capitalist Tweedledum and Tweedledee, the Republican and Democratic parties. These capitalist politicians forget that monkeying with the thermometer cannot change the social temperature.

⁸ Illegal interference with the political activity of minority parties was reported in 23 states in 1940.

The Americanism of Socialism

To grasp the sinister import of this, one has only to recall that the Republican party could not have been organized if these laws had operated in the days of its formation, and its predecessor, the Free Soil party, would have been suppressed in 1848 for its failure to poll for Martin Van Buren a sufficient number of votes. Like the Republican party in 1856, the Socialist Labor Party could muster only a minority support in the past. But to those who charge that lack of voting strength in the past is a denial of the imperative necessity for a Socialist reconstruction of society today, we reply in the measured words of Abraham Lincoln:

"The fact that we get no votes in your section is a fact of your making, and not of ours," he told a New Haven Connecticut, audience March 6, 1860. "And if there be fault in that, that fault is primarily yours, and remains so until you show that we repel you by any wrong principle or practice. If we do repel you by any wrong principle or practice, that fault is ours; but this brings you to where you ought to have started — to a discussion of the right or wrong of our principle."

The moment you consider the right or wrong of our Socialist principles, you are compelled to admit the gross evils inherent in capitalism. You are compelled to admit that they are aggravated as the system decays. You are driven to face squarely the fact that every liberty-throttling measure capitalism concocts to prolong its rule will ultimately throttle your liberties and your rights. "Familiarize yourselves with the chains of bondage," warned Lincoln, "and you prepare your own limbs to wear them. Accustomed to trample on the rights of others, and you have lost the genius of your own independence." Finally you cannot escape the conviction that Socialism, in its struggle to make real and enduring the inalienable rights of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, harmonizes with the best and noblest precepts of Americanism, and that its foe, though it appears draped in the national colors, is subverting Americanism and introducing despotism in the folds of the flag. With James Russell Lowell we say:

The Americanism of Socialism

“Let us speak plain; there is more force in names
Than most men dream of, and a lie may keep
Its throne a whole age longer if it skulk
Behind the shield of some fair-seeming name.”

V. Anti-Militarism — American Tradition

Bona fide Americanism and militarism cannot be reconciled. They are as hostile to one another as freedom and tyranny, as democracy and absolutism. Anti-militarism is written in our Declaration of Independence and all over the pages of our history. If there was one thing that the majority of the Founding Fathers were agreed upon it was that, having overthrown one military autocracy (that of King George III), they would not permit another to gain a foothold in this republic. This anti-militaristic sentiment was so strong, and the reaction against the main in uniform — whether royal or hireling — was so profound that for a few years after the defeat of the British, the United State Army consisted of 80 men and officer! Not until 1790 did Congress create a small army consisting of 1,283 men and officers and this it jealously kept in the background and under its strict control.

Why this fear and detestation of military power among the Founding Fathers? That it was deeply rooted is beyond dispute. The notes and papers on the secret sessions of the Constitutional Convention record the strong anti-military sentiments which prevailed. Said George Mason: “. . . when once a standing army is established in any country the people lose their liberty.” And James Madison, who is known to posterity as the Father of the Constitution, replied: “I most cordially agree with the honorable member last, that a standing army is one of the greatest mischiefs that can happen.” These men were not speculating. They were men of high moral and intellectual caliber, men learned in history and in the philosophy of government. Their deep and exhaustive study of history had taught them that just as war invites and feeds militarism, militarism invites and feeds war. This the James Madison put it:

“In time of war, great discretionary powers are constantly given to the executive magistrate [the President]. Constant apprehension of war has the same tendency to render the head too large for the body. A standing military force with an overgrown executive will not long be safe companions to liberty. THE MEANS OF DEFENSE AGAINST FOREIGN DANGER HAVE ALWAYS BEEN THE INSTRUMENTS OF TYRANNY AT HOME. Among the Romans it was a standing maxim to excite war, whenever a revolt is apprehended. Throughout all Europe the armies kept up under the pretext of defending have enslaved the people. It is perhaps questionable whether the best concerted system of absolute power in Europe could maintain itself, in a situation where no alarms of external danger could tame the people to the domestic yoke.” (Madison’s “Notes on Constitutional Convention,” May-September, 1787.) (Capitals ours.)

The Americanism of Socialism

Madison’s words should be reread, should be committed to memory. “The means of defense against foreign danger have always been the instruments of tyranny at home.” It is worth reflecting on this as we observe the rise in America of a monstrous military power, as we witness the intense training given our conscript army in the “art” of breaking strikes, handling “mobs” and suppressing civil “disturbances.” Speaking for spurious Americanism, the Boston Daily Globe, after describing strikebreaking maneuvers at Camp Edwards, piously observed: “Such work . . . is a typical duty of troops, and the practice is necessary as a party of the nation’s preparedness program.”!

Militarism implies conscription, for not nation can maintain a huge army in peacetime without employing compulsion. Known to be the very foundation of totalitarianism, conscription in time of peace has always been as repugnant to Americans as dictatorship itself. On May 16, 1777, Thomas Jefferson wrote to John Adams:

“[The draft] ever was the most unpopular and impracticable thing that could be attempted. Our people, even under the monarchial government, had learnt to consider it as the last of all oppressions.”

Thirty-four years later, the celebrated orator, Daniel Webster delivered a ringing speech against conscription. “. . . what would have been more absurd,” he said, “than for this Constitution to have said that to secure the great blessings of liberty it gave to government an uncontrolled power of military conscription.” He held that, if it could be proved that Congress had the power under the Constitution to deprive men of their civil liberty by thrusting them into military service against their will, the same arguments or pretext of an “emergency” could be used to prove “that Congress has power to create a dictator.” Then, summing up his contempt for this view:

“A free government with arbitrary means to administer it is a contradiction; a free government without adequate provision for personal security is an absurdity; a free government, with an uncontrolled power of military conscription, is a solecism [incongruity], at once the most ridiculous and abominable that ever entered into the head of man.”

The Americanism of Socialism

The American tradition against militarism and peacetime conscription was the envy of military-ridden peoples throughout the world. For more than a century it was not seriously challenged. Then, after the outbreak of the first World War, a small and powerful minority of the American ruling class raised an imperious demand in the public press for conscription as a “national defense” measure. This attack on one of the noblest American traditions failed. It was scotched in harsh terms by President Woodrow Wilson who, in his second annual message to Congress, December 8, 1914, said:

“It [national defense] cannot be discussed without first answering some very searching questions. It is said in some quarters that we are not prepared for war. What is meant by being prepared? Is it meant that we are not ready upon brief notice to put a nation in the field, a nation of men trained in arms? Of course we are not ready to do that; and we shall never be in time of peace so long as we retain our present political principles and institutions. And what is it that it is suggested we should be prepared for? To defend ourselves against attack? We have always found means to do that, and shall find them whenever it is necessary without calling our people away from their necessary tasks to render compulsory military service in time of peace.”

Then in words recalling the warning of the Founding Fathers Woodrow Wilson proceeded:

*“We never have had, and while we retain our present principles and ideals we never shall have, a large standing army . . . we shall not turn America into a military camp. We will not ask our young men to spend the best years of their lives making soldiers of themselves. . . . And especially when half the world is on fire we shall be careful to make our moral insurance against the spread of the conflagration very definite and certain and adequate indeed.”*⁹

Wilson’s denunciation of militarism is direct and unequivocal. Try as you will, you cannot twist it to mean anything else than that militarism and peacetime

⁹ Senator George W. Norris, who was one of that group of “willful men” who voted against a declaration of war in 1917, agreed with Wilson that militarism means death to democracy. While the conscription bill was being debated, on August 22, 1940, he said:

“I am afraid of building up a society based on compulsory military training in time of peace, for that leads to dictatorship and ultimately to the downfall of such a government as ours, at least, to the ending of democracy, just as surely as the rises in the east.”

The Americanism of Socialism

conscription are repugnant and hostile to our principles and ideals of personal liberty. As a student and teacher of history, Wilson knew that the officers of the Army and Navy represent a system which is the very antithesis of democracy, a system dependent upon a multitude of ranks in which each station adulates its superiors and despises those below. He knew that the military caste are, by nature, ambitious for power and rank and that they can enhance these only by adding more humble privates to their commands. Finally he knew that militarism brings about an unhealthy alliance between the military hierarchy and the war traffickers and munitions makers and that this, in turn, brings into being a self-interested political power which operates in the names of patriotism. “. . . such associations,” said a Senate Munitions Committee report, “are an inevitable part of militarism, and are to be avoided in peace-time at all cost.”

Socialism, being anti-militaristic, is in complete harmony with this fine and noble American tradition. It raises its voice now against those propertied interests which, in the name of “Americanism” and “patriotism,” would scuttle the anti-military tradition and duplicate in our nation the monstrous instrument of force which has cursed Europe for so many centuries. With Abraham Lincoln, Socialism holds that “our frowning battlements, our bristling seacoasts, the guns of our war steamers, or the strength of our gallant army . . . are not our reliance against a resumption of tyranny in our land.” And again with Lincoln, Socialism holds that “all of them may be turned against our liberties without making us stronger or weaker for the struggle.”

Yet, if militarism is not to become a fixture in American life, and if the immense war machine now abuilding is not to be “turned against our liberties,” those who cherish the American tradition of anti-militarism must learn that all their protests are futile and all their energy wasted unless they are directed against the cause of militarism. Modern militarism is the product of predatory capitalist society. It flourishes in the measure that capitalism decays. It cannot be uprooted unless and until capitalism is uprooted. The American scholar and social scientist, Daniel De Leon, succinctly expressed the viewpoint of Socialism:

“The attitude of the Socialist Labor Party toward anti-militarism — ‘Organize the working class integrally-industrially!’ Only then can the revolt against militarism result in a Waterloo to the class of sponge,

The Americanism of Socialism

instead of a massacre to the class of labor.”¹⁰

¹⁰ “As to Militarism,” Daily People, July 31, 1907.

VI. The Constitution and the Right to Revolution.

One of the darkest and most disgraceful chapters of American history was written in the months which followed the Armistice of 1918. Spurious Americanism, the “Americanism” which reflects the interests and fears of the ruling class, sought victims for its anti-Bolshevik crusade. It brazenly incited the mob spirit, and, aided and abetted by the police, the courts and the Department of Justice itself, it deprived hundreds of their liberty on the flimsiest of pretexts. Among them were many members of the Socialist Labor Party, but these the Department of Justice was compelled — reluctantly — to release. The Socialist Labor Party could not be legally suppressed and its members could not be legally jailed for the very simple reason that it planted itself squarely upon the Constitution of the United States.

To those who are unacquainted with the unique character of our basic charter it may seem contradictory that a political party of revolution can plant itself squarely upon the Constitution. It is not contradictory; it is logical. The American Constitution is, itself, a revolutionary document. It was the first ever adopted which provided ways and means for its own amendment. Its authors, being men of vision and foresight, believed that, as conditions changed, the Constitution would have to be altered to fit the changed conditions. In inserting the amendment clause (Article V.), they afforded “We, the People,” of succeeding generations the means whereby to make any alteration in our society and government which we deem essential to our welfare and happiness. Article V, in effect, legalizes revolution.

The celebrated American humorist, Artemus Ward, tells an amusing story of a man who was in prison fifteen years. Then one day a bright thought struck him. He recalled that the door was not locked, opened it and walked out a free man. Article V of the American Constitution is the open door to liberty for the American workers. It gives them the Constitutional right to unite their majority and demand that private ownership, with its evil brood of war and poverty, give way to collective property and progress.

Spurious Americanism, speaking through the lips of professors, priests, politicians and their masters, the economic overlords, strives to conceal the revolutionary implications of the Constitution. “Undoubtedly,” said the aristocratic-minded president of the capitalist-endowed Columbia University, Nicholas Murray Butler, “the weakest link in the chain of the Constitution is Article V. . . .” (Speech delivered in 1927.) From the capitalist point of view he is right, for reasons to which we have already alluded, but only from the capitalist point of view.

The Americanism of Socialism

Because of the revolutionary implications of Article V, spurious Americanism is making a prodigious effort to implant the idea in our youth that the Constitution is “sacred” and that any attempt to alter it radically would be “sacrilegious,” therefore immoral. Fortunately, the view was explicitly repudiated by some of the most celebrated of the Revolutionary Fathers. In a letter to Samuel Kercheval, dated July 12, 1816, Thomas Jefferson made it plain beyond peradventure that amendments were anticipated and that a peaceful method of altering the Constitution was provided to render unnecessary bloodshed and violence. Wrote Jefferson:

“Some men look at constitutions with sanctimonious reverence and deem them like the ark of the covenant, too sacred to be touched. They ascribe to the men of the preceding age a wisdom more than human, and suppose what they did to be beyond amendment. I knew that age well; I belonged to it and labored with it. . . . We might as well require a man to wear still the coat which fitted him when a boy, as civilized society to remain ever under the regimen of their . . . ancestors. . . . This corporeal globe, and everything upon it, belong to its present corporeal inhabitants, during their generation. They alone have a right to direct what is the concern of themselves alone, and to declare the law of that direction, and this declaration can only be made by their majority. . . . If this avenue be shut to the call of sufferance, it will make itself heard through that of force, and we shall go on, as other nations are doing, in the endless circle of oppression, rebellion, reformation; and oppression, rebellion, reformation, again; and so on forever.”

Thomas Jefferson’s reasoning was sound, and his words stand as a sharp rebuke to those who, today, would deny the right of the majority so “provide new Guards for their future security.” Jefferson expressed the philosophy upon which the nation was built, a philosophy summed up succinctly by George Washington when he said: “The basis of our political systems is the right of the people to alter their constitutions of government. (Farewell Address,” 1776)

The Americanism of Socialism

If the people did not possess this right, if the Dr. Butlers had their way and Article V were qualified to exclude fundamental changes in our society, is it not glaringly apparent that all hope of the impoverished masses' rising above their present condition of servitude through peaceful and civilized means would be gone? For surely it is fatuous to conceive of the ruling class's voluntarily relinquishing its rule. There is not a vestige of a basis in history for such a hope. "I challenge you to cite me an instance in all the history of the world where liberty was handed down from above!" wrote the World War President and historian, Woodrow Wilson. "Liberty always is attained by forces working below, underneath, by the great movement of the people."

The immortal utterances of Abraham Lincoln on the right of the people to throw off their oppressors likewise constitute a blistering refutation of the narrow, restrictive construction put upon the Constitution by spurious Americanism. In his arraignment of President Polk for that executive's unprovoked attack on Mexico (January 12, 1848), Lincoln said:

"Any people anywhere being inclined and having the power have the right to rise up and shake off the existing government, and form a new one that suits them better. This is a most valuable, a most sacred right — a right which we hope and believe is to liberate the world."

And in his first Inaugural Address the Great Emancipator repeated this fundamental philosophy — philosophy which finds expression in the amendment clause of our Constitution:

"This country, with its institutions, belongs to the people who inhabit it. Whenever they shall grow weary of the existing government, they can exercise their Constitutional right of amending it, or their revolutionary right to dismember or overthrow it."

How often have the traducers of Socialism winced when Lincoln's unequivocal words have been flung into their teeth. How often have they wished fervently he had never spoken them? But whether Lincoln had given expression to this fundamental principle of Americanism, or not, the right would still be ours. It would be for the same reason that it was the right of the Revolutionary Fathers to rise up and throw off the military autocracy of George III, for the same reason that it was the right of all people at all times to wrest what measure of liberty they were capable of wresting from the reluctant hands of tyranny.

The Americanism of Socialism

We are fortunate, indeed, that this right is embodied in the Constitution, fortunate, indeed, that the founders of the Socialist Labor Party possessed the wisdom to build this great movement on that right. Their foresight, like the foresight of the Founding Fathers, provides our generation with the means for a peaceful Socialist reconstruction of society. The A. Mitchell Palmers of decadent capitalism may fret and fume as they please. To “get at” the Socialist Labor Party they must repudiate the Constitution, they must acknowledge that their Americanism is spurious.

VII. Industrial Feudalism or Industrial Democracy?

Should a typhoid epidemic break out in your community, you would not merely treat the several cases reported; you would seek the cause and eliminate it. Why, then should we treat social diseases — poverty amidst plenty, unemployment, war — with less intelligence? Their cause is clearly capitalism, ownership of the means of production by the idle few and production for sale with its terrible concomitant, the international struggle for markets, and war. In the light of the plainly written injunction in the Declaration of Independence enjoining us to throw off any government obstructive to the ends of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, who will gainsay that Socialist aims are the very essence of Americanism? To keep silent in the sight of needless misery would be un-American. Such conduct would be cowardly and contrary to the revolutionary, freedom-loving spirit in which this nation was born.

Gradually in the beginning, then at a more rapid tempo, the wealth of this nation has concentrated, rendering propertiless and dependent the overwhelming majority. Yet the illusion of independence has persisted. It is still true that the individual worker may quit his master. But the “independence” ends there, for as soon as he quits one master he must seek another. Withdraw yourself! Get perspective! Then look at the social scene in America. You will see, not a mass of independent workers, but a class of wage slaves bound as securely to a class of capitalist owners as ever chattel slave was to his master or serf to the soil.¹¹

“It is of no consequence by what name you call the people,” declared the American patriot, John Adams, in the Continental Congress of 1777, “whether by that of freemen or slaves; in some countries the laboring poor are called freemen, in others they are called slaves; but the difference as to the state is imaginary only. What matters it whether a landlord employing ten laborers on his farm gives them

¹¹ The American anthropologist, Lewis Henry Morgan, celebrated author of Ancient Society, in a lecture delivered in 1852, entitled “Diffusion Against Centralization,” underscores this point:

“Centralize property in the hands of a few,” he said, “and the millions are under bondage of property — a bondage as absolute and deplorable as if their limbs were covered with manacles. Abstract all property from the hands of labor and you thereby reduce labor to dependence; and that dependence becomes as complete a servitude as the master could fix upon his slave.”

The Americanism of Socialism

annually as much money as will buy them the necessaries of life or gives them those necessities at short hand? . . . The condition of the laboring poor in most countries — that of the fishermen particularly of the Northern States — is as abject as that of slavery.”

The condition of the wage slave today is bad. For more than a decade millions have rotted on the industrial scrapheap while their more fortunate brethren have hung precariously on the raw edge. Only through war — mass butchery of “surplus” workingmen and mass destruction of surplus commodities — could capitalism start the wheels of industry again. Everyone who will reflect but for a moment know this. They know that had it not been for the violent contest for world trade we would still be wallowing in the trough of a “depression” or “recession” or whatever euphemistic name our capitalists choose to call their chronic economic crisis.

But wretched and insecure though it is, the lot of the toiler under capitalism is not as bad as the industrial serfdom which is in store for us if we permit capitalism to drag society backward to Industrial Feudalism. The “free” wage slave is rapidly disappearing from Nazi Germany and Fascist Italy. In those blighted countries workers are forbidden to quit their jobs at will and are bound to their employers in much the same way as the serf was bound to the soil and, thereby, to his feudal lord. This is the trend in every capitalist nation! It is a trend which is accelerated by organization for total war. In an editorial on “Britain’s ‘Dictatorship,’” May 24, 1940, the premier organ of plutocratic capitalism in America, the New York Times, declared:

“But once the principle of conscription for the army is admitted . . . then there is no logical stopping point. If men can be ordered to leave their jobs, their homes, their civil life, to obey commands at any hour of the day or night, go wherever they are sent, perhaps to be shelled, machine-gunned, bombed or slain, then there is no reason why other men should not be ordered into coal mines, or to work twelve hours a day instead of eight, or seven days instead of six” (Italics ours.)

Aye. There is no logical stopping point short of TOTALITARIANISM FOR THE NATION AND INDUSTRIAL SERFDOM FOR THE WORKERS! It is to avert that calamity, it is to put society back upon the road to peace and progress that the Socialist Labor Party urges the workers to heed this warning and acquaint themselves without delay with the Socialist program for a reconstruction of society.

The Americanism of Socialism

Instead of wasting their energy and substance in a vain and futile effort to reform outmoded capitalism, the workers must unite under the political banner of Socialism to demand the unconditional surrender of capitalism. The day is past for so-called “immediate demands” in the platform of Socialism. “Immediate demands” (reforms) are as out of place in the platform of bona fide Socialism as they would have been out of place in the Declaration of Independence. For our generation of toilers it is all, or nothing. There can be no compromise, no half-measures. If we do not dare to claim our rights and perform our duties as men, the reaction will be emboldened to destroy those rights — even though it set progress back a thousand years.

The rights asserted in the Declaration of Independence were backed up by arms which the colonists possessed and which their mode of life had taught them to use with great skill. The modern working class has neither arms nor practice in their use. But the toilers of our age possess an infinitely superior weapon, or force, with which to back up the Socialist ballot. The immense changes and improvements wrought in the methods of production have placed that weapon in our hands. Mass production has placed the workers collectively in de facto control of industry. They run industry from top to bottom. Organized into a Socialist Industrial Union, prepared to act concertedly the moment the political signal is given, the united working class in a position to take possession of all the means of production and distribution, lock out the rebellious capitalist class, if it stages a “pro-slavery rebellion,” and continue operation for the benefit of society.

The Socialist Industrial Union alone can cope with the situation should the capitalist minority choose to rebel against the decision of the majority. It alone can prevent chaos and civil war, maintain order and avert widespread distress among the workers. Above all, the Socialist Industrial Union supplies the framework for the Industrial Republic of Labor to replace the worn-out capitalist State. Just as the thirteen colonies became the thirteen states in the United States, the Socialist Industrial Unions become the units in the Socialist Industrial Republic. An Industrial Congress composed of democratically elected representatives from the industries will replace the political Congress of capitalist politicians. As the celebrated American social architect, Daniel De Leon, described the purpose and aim of Socialist Industrial Unionism:

The Americanism of Socialism

“Industrial Unionism is the Socialist Republic in the making; and, the goal once reached, the Industrial Union is the Socialist Republic in operation.

“Accordingly, the Industrial Union is, at once, the battering ram with which to pound down the fortress of capitalism, and the successor of the capitalist social structure itself.”¹²

*

Never, not even in Abraham Lincoln’s time, was it more true that “the dogmas of the quiet past are inadequate to the stormy present.” To cling to hackneyed capitalist dogma, to maintain the capitalist system, means to re-enact over and over again all the dreadful tragedies capitalism has produced, each time upon a more stupendous scale and bringing proportionate havoc and human misery. In spite of ourselves and irrespective of our private wishes, our generation has been entrusted with the gigantic task of sweeping away the incubus of wage slavery as our forbears, eighty years ago, swept away the incubus of chattel slavery. Once more “we shall nobly save or meanly lose the last best hope of earth.” We stand today where the roads fork. One leads to Industrial Feudalism and imperialistic barbarism; the other to the Industrial Republic of Emancipated Labor, a society of equity, harmony and abundance for all.

¹² “Industrial Unionism,” Daily People, Jan. 30, 1913.

Addenda: The Right to Revolution

Whenever any government becomes destructive of these [life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness] it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it, and to institute a new government, laying its foundations on such principles, and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness — Thomas Jefferson, The Declaration of Independence, 1776.

It is an observation of one of the profoundest inquirers into human affairs that a revolution of government is the strongest proof that can be given by a people of their virtue and good sense. — John Adams, Diary, 1786.

An oppressed people are authorized whenever they can to rise and break their fetters. — Henry Clay, Speech in House of Representatives, March 4, 1818.

All men recognize the right of revolution: that is, the right to refuse allegiance to, and to resist, the government when its tyranny or its inefficiency are great and unendurable — H.D. Thoreau, “An Essay on Civil Disobedience,” 1849